A ROYAL

WEDDING

EXPERIENCE

The royal yellow historical palace, Gedung Kuning was built in grand Palladian style. A stunning heritage setting fit for royalty for your most special day...

GEDUNG KUNING

THE STORY

Gedung Kuning, meaning "Yellow Mansion" in Malay, was probably built around the same period or slightly before the Istana Kampong Gelam (present-day Malay Heritage Centre). Located next to the former istana, it stood within what was once royal compound.

Like the Istana Kampong Gelam, the architecture of Gedung Kuning reflects Palladian influence, while the form and internal layout derives from the single storey, raised Malay house. Designed to admit air and light but exclude glare and rain, louvred windows are an adaptation to suit the tropical climate.

The mansion served as a residence for much of its history. Tengku Mahmud, a grandson of Sultan Hussein (1775 -1835), was known to have stayed in the house. In 1912, Haji Yusoff (1855-1950), a merchant of Javanese descent bought the mansion. Haji Yusoff's father lived in Kampong Glam, near Istana Kampong Glam, and had a food stall near Kallang River.

Haji Yusoff, born and grew up in Kampong Glam, run a successful business producing songkok (brimless headwear) and tali pinggang (a belt with a small pouch) which were sold locally and exported regionally.

The tali pinggang he produced, popular with pilgrims making the haj, were distinctive and gave rise to his name, "Haji Yusoff Tali Pinggang".

Besides Gedung Kuning, Haji Yusoff also owned property in other parts of Singapore and Malaysia.
